

Leadership in Health Systems Management

Become a nurse leader in policy and patient care.

Prepare for leadership roles in all practice environments. The nursing profession is experiencing dramatic change. Nurse leaders are being called upon to assist in the transformation of healthcare delivery systems to improve population health and patient outcomes.

The aging baby boomer population, increased access and demand for medical services, and expected RN retirements present a unique challenge for the healthcare workforce. The need for nurse leaders is increasing. In fact, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics projects employment for medical and health services managers will grow 28% from 2022 to 2032, much faster than average for all occupations.

Change Makers and Masters

The MSN–Leadership in Health Systems Management program prepares you to assume supervisory and management responsibilities in all practice environments, building the skills necessary to put you on a leadership career track. As a nurse leader, you'll direct and manage nursing staff workflow to facilitate and deliver exceptional patient care, advocating for your patients, nurses, and the nursing profession.
